Alexandra P. Rivera/2

Our world is increasingly complex and this is reflected in the profession and in our ALA organization. It is necessary for ALA to apply the profession's core values as it seeks to stay relevant to its current and future members. ALA is being asked by its members for improved organizational effectiveness. This will require strong cohesion across the organization, even greater transparency in our fiscal and decision making processes, better communication mechanisms, and enhanced efforts to be responsive to our changing world as it relates to our library practice including shifts in the US and global demographics, the legislative landscape, and technology. These activities are critical in developing a sustainable future for ALA and thus ensuring that our libraries have a strong foundation to help prepare future generations for an increasingly complex information environment.
